COVID-19 reminders

Throughout August, students of all ages have been returning to the classroom – both virtually and in person. In the news and in our communities, we’re seeing local districts and universities reopening under a vast variety of guidelines. Although everyone is trying their best to ensure the reopening of schools is as safe as possible, employers understand this is a big opportunity for the virus to spread.

In the past few weeks, positive cases are beginning to show a downward trend. However, testing has also decreased, so there’s not a crystal clear picture on the true battle against COVID-19. We’re seeing the reduction in cases correlates directly with heavier state restrictions and greater acceptance of wearing masks in any public spaces.

Although we’re extremely pleased cases are going down, we know this can change quickly. It’s more important than ever to keep your guard up and continue following the guidelines set by the CDC – they’re working to keep you safe.

In addition to following the guidelines, health officials are encouraging everyone to get a flu shot this season. Not only will this keep you safe and lessen the spread of the flu, it will also free up hospital beds in case there’s a spike in COVID-19 cases.

Researchers are hard at work testing vaccines and therapeutics, but there’s no quick fix. We all want to be able to put COVID-19 behind us, but even in the best of circumstances, a vaccine won’t be ready until 2021 according to experts like Dr. Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases. In the meantime, we must do our part to protect ourselves, our families and our communities.
